FOREWORD: THE DIGITAL LANDSCAPE OF PAKISTAN

---

The digital landscape of Pakistan has undergone substantial changes in recent years, driven by various factors. These include improved access to internet and telecommunication services, an increased role of the state and intermediaries in content moderation, the widespread dissemination of mis/disinformation, and its exploitation to undermine democratic discourse on issues related to peace, social justice, economy, politics, elections, and national security.

The period from 2022 to 2023 witnessed intense political upheaval in tandem with an economic downturn that brought Pakistan to the brink of default. This challenging situation was further compounded by severe climate disasters, resulting in instability, stagnation, and regression across various aspects, including the country's internet landscape.

Despite the adversities, Pakistan made some strides in terms of internet access and overall governance. The Pakistan Telecommunication Annual Report for 2022<sup>1</sup> revealed significant figures, including over 197 million telecom subscribers, a tele-density of 90%, 124 million broadband subscribers with 56% penetration, and more than 70 million active social media users, as reported by the PTA.

The increased internet access and widespread adoption of social media platforms have transformed communication, information acquisition, and societal participation in Pakistan. Notably, YouTube leads with 71.7 million users, followed by Facebook (57.5 million), Snack Video (20.0 million), Snapchat (18.8 million), TikTok (18.3 million), Instagram (15.6 million), and X (previously Twitter) with 3.4 million users, according to PTA's Annual Report 2022.

In recent years, political leaders and parties have embraced social media platforms such as Facebook, Twitter, and Instagram to connect with supporters, disseminate their messages, and mobilize their base. This proactive approach has enabled them to engage a broader audience and gain prominence in the digital sphere.

Social media platforms also serve as tools to amplify political participation, especially among the younger generations. The active digital presence of political parties not only attracts the public but also enhances participation, generates views, and fosters a positive image for the party organization.

While Pakistan is still progressing in fully harnessing the potential of digital platforms in the democratic process, it is evident that the country is undergoing a significant revolution in this regard. The journey of leveraging the power of social media for political purposes has seen notable advancements, albeit with some distinctive challenges. Pakistani politicians have increasingly used social media platforms to connect with the masses, particularly the sizable younger generation in the country's population.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

What is the basic digital footprint of political parties in Pakistan and how do they communicate online with their members, supporters, followers and other citizens? What platforms, including social media, do they use and how successful are they in terms of their reach?

These were some of the questions that drove this snapshot survey conducted by the Institute for Research, Advocacy and Development (IRADA), an Islamabad-based independent research and advocacy organization focusing on social development and civil liberties. The snapshot research was conducted in August 2023. The idea was to map the digital footprint of the political parties close to an election and generate data and analysis on basic quantitative and qualitative aspects of their political communication.

This report reveals the digital pedigree of our political classes and in most cases indicates how our political parties are woefully ill-prepared to interact with citizens who are more digitally savvy and digitally-immersed than politicians and their parties. It also indicates how there is a dearth of digital literacy among not just political leadership as a distinct class but also their party apparatuses and their functionaries. No wonder the political agenda online is dominated mainly by political parties organized in propaganda practices and hate speech rather than inclusive political communications by parties that are democratic but not digitally adequate in promoting inclusive and plural democratic narratives. Their digital inadequacy compromises democracy by strengthening non-transparency around critical details about parties and therefore ends up promoting inaccessibility to the parties by their actual and potential electorates.

The findings reveal that Pakistan's oldest as well as newest political parties have severe shortcomings in terms of political communication with the citizens and voters of Pakistan, as well as with their own members. This comes across starkly through this snapshot study of a list of 13 political parties analysing two key online information mechanisms – official party websites and their official social media accounts, plus personal accounts of the top leadership of these political parties.

The following are some of the key findings of this research:

- Communications: For entities that pursue democratic ideals most of the political parties in Pakistan failed the test of internal transparency and external communications efficiency. Some of the parties don't even have official websites although some of their leaders run personal social media accounts. Several parties do not even name their chief – the highest office holder – on their websites.
- Constitution: Most parties do not share their constitution on their websites – so neither their members have access to information about procedures on internal elections and party structures nor do the public have access to basic information about the parties' mission, goals and objectives or party membership criteria.

- Manifestos: Most parties that have websites had uploaded their latest manifestos for the 2018 elections. However, most of the previous manifestos have disappeared, leaving citizens interested in the comparative evaluation of two consecutive manifestos unable to do so.
- Languages: Since the previous report, most parties have improved in this aspect and listed content available in both English and Urdu language.
- Provincial Outreach: The number of parties using provincial languages remains low depriving an entire segment of internet users, their followers and potential supporters more readily accessible and usable information.
- Leadership lists: Most parties share the lists of their central leaders on their websites but half of the parties do not share lists of the leaders of their provincial chapters even though most parties have a strong provincial-level political focus.
- Decision making: What is the internal decision-making process in the parties and who makes the decisions? Barely half of the parties share the lists of members of their central executive committee and general body. Most parties do not even share lists of their current legislators online. This is an information blackhole that prevents local party members and other followers from communicating with the members to influence internal party agendas and debates.
- Documentation: Most parties are poor in archiving official party positions and decisions as most neither share minutes or details of the party's central executive committee meetings nor minutes or details of the party's general body meetings. This is a recipe for non-accountability as neither party members nor other party supporters can weigh a party's democratic evolution based on leadership's accountability to party members.
- Focal persons: Only four parties shares either the name of their communication's focal person on their websites or even the official party email address. The absence of these key details amounts to discouraging direct engagement of the electorate with the parties including by both party members or voters and media.
- Audit reports: Not even a single party surveyed share either the latest or previous audited reports of the party's accounts and finances on their websites. This lack of crucial public-interest information is tantamount to discouraging transparency and accountability on financing operational aspects of the parties.
- Social media: A majority of parties in Pakistan are active on social media and maintain official Facebook pages and official Twitter accounts. It also appears that political parties prefer to use social media as the primary tool to communicate with their electorate instead of their website. Key leaders of most parties rely on social media platforms heavily to drive both party agendas and personal political communication.
- Followership: Dozens of politicians in Pakistan, mostly from mainstream political parties, are some of the most active and popular citizens of the country on social media. On twitter, over ten politicians have garnered at least 1 million followers each, the highest being Imran Khan at 19.6 million.

The parties chosen for this survey include some of the oldest ones that have been elected to national parliament and provincial legislatures in this millennium such as Pakistan People's Party (PPP), Pakistan Muslim League-N (PML-N), Pakistan Tehrik-e-Insaf (PTI), Awami National Party

(ANP), Jamiat Ulema Islam-F (JUI-F), Jamaat-e-Islami (JI), Muttahida Qaumi Movement (MQM), Pakistan Muslim League-Q (PML-Q), Pakistan Muslim League-F (PML-F), Balochistan National Party (BNP), Balochistan Awami Party (BWP), Jamhoori Wattan Part (JWP) and the recently created Awami Muslim League Pakistan (AMLPP).

Disclaimer: The data, information and review in this report is based on a direct review of the website and social media pages of the parties surveyed. It was not always possible to certify whether some of the parties had an active official social media presence. Also, the data, review and analysis are based on information verifiable up to August 18, 2023. Online information, including number of followers and users of social media accounts, varies by the day. The data, information and analysis in this study is not exhaustive but its universe sample is aimed at being representative and indicative.
